

There are so many factors to take into account when you're looking for the ideal carpet cleaning service in Austin, TX. The city is spread out, so you may be compelled just to look for the closest service to your part of town and go from there. But there are other variables you need to consider before you make that call. Prior to selecting a carpet cleaner, have you thought about what type of service you want to use? Have you considered their methods and their track record? If you haven't, you should.

Advances in carpet cleaning technology have brought about all kinds of advancements in the arena of carpet cleaning. Once upon a time your only option was steam cleaning. Steam is still an available option, although there have been advancements in the methods and equipment. While the steam will still get your carpets damp, it's nothing like it was even 15 years ago, when the carpet seemed to be damp for days.

Some of the newer cleaning methods include dry extraction, where a dry chemical solvent is placed in your carpet, then removed by trained professionals. That solvent adheres to the dirt and odors and lifts them out. Similar to dry extraction is the dry foam method. The foam dissolves into the carpet fibers and dries, then once dry it acts similarly to the dry extraction and pulls the dirt and stains up where a professional then extracts them. There are variations on both the wet and "dry" methods of carpet cleaning, but all of them have their advantages and disadvantages.

It's important to note that people with allergies or chemical sensitivity should definitely find out if there are any known allergic reactions caused by the chemicals used in carpet cleaning. Austin is a very environmentally friendly town, and there are bound to be hypoallergenic and earth-friendly options available for whatever your specific need.

Other considerations when searching for a carpet cleaner in Austin, Texas include finding out if they have references. Experience is key, not only in the sense that they have a good record of working safely within a home, but also experience with the kind of carpeting you have to assure they clean it correctly. Do they have the equipment necessary to correctly clean your carpets? That's vital to doing the job correctly. Additionally, you will want to make sure they are insured in the unlikely event that their service or technicians adversely affect something in your home.

Finding one place where you can compare all the local businesses that meet your carpet cleaning needs is considerably easier, thanks to CarpetCleaning.org. CarpetCleaning.org offers reviews and comparisons of local carpet cleaners and allows you to make an educated decision before you even have to pick up the phone. Rather than spending half a day on the phone consulting with friends and neighbors, looking at multiple review sites scattered all over the internet, and doing some phone investigation on your own, CarpetCleaning.org takes the guesswork out of finding the right carpet cleaner in Austin for your needs.